The scouts having been sent out, I soon after received information that you had sent out a small body of mounted men. I soon after received information that you had sent out a small body of mounted men and received it in such a way as to induce me to believe that the men who had been taken for rebel cavalry were your own scouts, and that fear and alarm had greatly exaggerated their numbers. Believing this to be the case, I retired to bed by 4 o'clock in the morning, satisfied that my conjectures were right as to the nature of the cavalry, about whom I had received the information above. Before retiring, however, I roused the men from their quarters and ordered them to load their guns and retire again, taking care to sleep on their arms.—Precisely at Reveille, and almost at the moment when our drums were beating, I was awakened by the shouting of the cavalry and almost at the moment when our drums were beating, I was awakened by the shouting of the cavalry. moment when our drums were beating, I was awakened by the shouting of the cavwas awakened by the shouting of the cavalry who were coming down at a gallop in rear of the officers' tents.
